The kōura Aggressive Fund had a return of (0.52%) in October, and is up 11% p.a. annualised over 2 years.

Kōura US Equities fund was positive even as news of the Covid variant of concern, Omicron, was announced days before month end. A fall in the S&P500 was offset by a weakening NZD. The sharp fall came after the first three weeks of the month saw strong returns with US markets up 2.2% off the back of strong economic data and corporate earnings.

Koura Emerging Markets Fund performed well driven by a weakening NZ dollar (this fund is unhedged), which increased the value of the holding in NZ dollar terms, even though the underlying ETF that we invest in fell. The NZD ended the month at a 16 month low against the USD.

New Zealand Equities was the main detractor as the market continued its dismal run of late. This was driven by the fear that higher interest rates will have on property prices impacting the Retirement and Property sectors of the market. Travel and Leisure stocks were impacted by both the news of the Omicron Covid variant, and news of the delayed border reopening plan. Slower than expected growth in Japan and concerns over Omicron in Europe saw our Rest of World fund fall last month.

Omicron (and future new variants) will probably lead to higher volatility over the next few weeks until we get more certainty on its impact, but at this stage it is unclear why Omicron will change any of the medium term market fundamentals. And let's remember, markets value the medium to long term not the short term!
